Checking in with the Religious School

It's hard to believe, but the religious school year is half over. Here's an update if you haven't been in touch with the school lately.

- This year, the religious school welcomed six new students, the most in many years. They range from kindergarten to fourth grade and have varied levels of Jewish education.
- With the influx of new students, younger students form the school's largest group.
- In addition to weekly classes with our teachers, Sonia Campeanu and Sandra Whitman, students have periodic sessions with Rav Sam, Noam Wolf, the Jewish Federation shlichah, and Barbara Bailey and Elaine Schwartz, who provide crafts.
- Students range from kindergarten to ninth grade and aleph bet to Confirmation class. Next year, we will have one Bar Mitzvah and at least one Confirmand.
- Favorite parts of Religious school this year include reading from the tanach, crafts and snack time.

Note on Tu B'shevat

- You may have been surprised to see the Tu B'shevat seder listed as lay-led. Rav Sam and Amalia are expecting their new baby that week, so they will be just a little busy. We will be thinking of them as we celebrate.
